

Illinois Department of Financial and Professional Regulation

Office of the Secretary

JB PRITZKER
Governor

DEBORAH HAGAN
Secretary

For Immediate Release:
March 9, 2021

Contact: Chris Slaby
Christopher.Slaby@Illinois.gov

IDFPR Joins Multi-State Coalition of Regulators, Inviting U.S. Secretary of Education to Join Them in Protecting Student Loan Borrowers

Urges Secretary Cardona to Reverse Specific Policies That Undermine States' Oversight of Student Loan Servicers

CHICAGO – IDFPR joined a multi-state coalition of state financial regulators congratulating Secretary Cardona on his confirmation and inviting him to partner with states in protecting student loan borrowers across the country. Specifically, the letter calls to the Secretary's attention two policies instituted by former Secretary Betsy DeVos that obstruct states' ability to regulate the private companies that service federal student loans. The state regulators urge Secretary Cardona to reverse these policies and to join states' efforts to ensure the student loan servicing industry is a resource for borrowers, not a barrier to relief or source of harm.

"We are looking forward to a new day at the Department of Education, which we hope will be strong regulatory partners with states on student lending supervision," said Deborah Hagan, Secretary of the Illinois Department of Financial and Professional Regulation. "Better oversight of federal student loan servicers will mean better protections for borrowers, which is our top priority for this industry."

There is currently approximately $1.6 trillion in outstanding federal student loan debt, owed by 43 million loan borrowers across the country. Approximately 1.6 million Illinois residents owe $60 billion in federal student loans to the United States government. These federal loans are all serviced by private companies. These servicers process monthly bills and payments, administer loan repayment and cancellation programs such as Public Service Loan Forgiveness, and are often borrowers' sole points of contact for help managing their loans.

However, for years there have been instances of servicers providing inaccurate information or engaging in harmful misconduct, often resulting in increased costs and extended repayment periods for borrowers. Several states and the federal government have investigated these practices. In 2017, the Illinois Attorney General's Office sued one of the nation's largest student loan servicers and lenders Navient formerly known as Sallie Mae, alleging that Navient committed numerous violations of the Consumer Fraud and Deceptive Business Practices Act, including for misleading borrowers about their income-based repayment options.

In response to this growing crisis, some states have passed laws to require private servicers to obtain licenses to do business in their jurisdictions and requiring them to follow specific servicing rules and protections. In 2019, Illinois passed the Student Loan Servicing Rights Act, which requires student loan servicers to be licensed and adhere to a comprehensive Bill of Rights that establishes strong borrower protections covering proper payment processing, complaint handling, and ensuring that borrowers receive appropriate repayment options, including income-based repayment.

Today, Illinois joined New York, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Rhode Island, Washington state, and Wisconsin in submitting a letter calling on Secretary Cardona to join states in their efforts to protect student loan borrowers. Specifically, the letter urges Secretary Cardona to reverse two policies instituted by former Secretary DeVos that obstruct states' regulation and oversight of the servicing industry.

First, the former administration issued guidance asserting that federal law preempts states' regulation of the private companies that service federal student loan, including licensing requirements and other consumer protections.

Second, the former administration and the student loan servicing industry attempted to use the federal Privacy Act of 1974 as a shield against states' requests for information, claiming that federal law prohibited student loan servicers from sharing certain information with states. Each of these two policies created unnecessary and legally dubious obstacles to states implementing common-sense consumer protections and investigating potential misconduct. The coalition's letter urges Secretary Cardona to reverse these two policies to allow states to proceed without federal opposition and as a way to partner with states in protecting student loan borrowers.

A copy of the submitted letter may be found with this press release.

###

March 9, 2021

Dr. Miguel A. Cardona
Secretary of Education
U.S. Department of Education
400 Maryland Avenue SW
Washington, DC 20202

Re: Protecting student loan borrowers by reversing the Department of Education’s DeVos-era obstruction of state oversight of student loan servicers.

Dear Secretary Cardona:

Congratulations on your confirmation as Secretary of Education. The undersigned state regulators look forward to partnering with the Biden administration and with you in a variety of ways to serve the public as we weather the current public health and economic crises and ensure an equitable recovery.

We write to call your attention to two harmful policy positions that the former Secretary of Education Betsy DeVos asserted that undermine state supervision of private companies that service federal student loans. The first is an agency interpretation asserting preemption of state oversight and the second is the routine shielding of student loan records from disclosure to state regulators based on a misinterpretation and misapplication of the Privacy Act of 1974. In addition to the challenges posed by the current public health and economic crises, these misguided and unsound policies inhibit states’ abilities to oversee this servicing industry in the midst of a student loan debt crisis. As such, we recommend that the U.S. Department of Education rescind these policies to promote states’ ability to protect their borrower residents.

States play a critical consumer protection role in the student loan industry.

Since this country’s founding, states have played an important role in protecting consumers from fraudulent and abusive practices. To that end, states have enacted laws to regulate the student loan servicer industry. States exerted this authority in the aftermath of documented unlawful practices within the industry which have contributed to significant borrower harms and the recent ballooning of student loan debt.¹

¹ See, e.g., Stacy Cowley and Jessica Silver-Greenberg, “Student Loan Collector Cheated Millions, Lawsuits Say,” DealBook, New York Times (Jan. 18, 2017), <https://www.nytimes.com/2017/01/18/business/dealbook/student-loans-navient-lawsuit.html> (discussing student loan servicer practices); Majority Staff to Members, Committee on Financial Services, U.S. House of Representatives, Sept. 5, 2019, Memorandum, “September 10, 2019, hearing entitled ‘A $1.5 Trillion Crisis: Protecting Student Borrowers and Holding Student Loan Servicers Accountable,’”

In recent years, several states have proposed and adopted student loan servicing laws which define and enforce standards for business conduct within the student loan industry.² Regulatory supervision allows state regulators to request and review the servicers' business records to evaluate compliance while screening for borrower harm.

State oversight of student loan servicers generally focuses on servicing practices, not the nature of underlying loans, which may have been originated pursuant to a federal program or by a private lender. These servicing practices include, however, the execution of certain programs that are unique to federal student loans, such as income-driven repayment plans and Public Service Loan Forgiveness – areas central to documented servicer misconduct.³ As borrowers' dedicated and often sole point of contact for their student loans, both federal and private, servicers' unwillingness or inability to provide accurate and relevant information to individual borrowers and to guide them to the most cost-effective repayment options can have disastrous effects with few opportunities for recourse. States are well positioned to supervise this industry, but our ability to do so suffers without federal allies.

The former administration abdicated its responsibility to protect student loan borrowers and attempted to block others from doing so.

As the nation's leading student loan originator, the Department of Education contracts with private companies to service approximately $1.56 trillion in outstanding federal student loan debt. The Department of Education is therefore uniquely positioned to ensure these companies do not mislead or otherwise harm student loan borrowers.

Over the past four years, states have had to fill a void created by a lack of federal oversight while also defending against attempts by the Department of Education to dismantle state protections for borrowers.⁴ Under Secretary DeVos, the Department of Education tried to insulate its contracted servicers from state oversight. It has also stymied attempts at federal oversight of student loan servicers by the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau.⁵ The role of states in https://financialservices.house.gov/uploadedfiles/hhrg-116-ba00-20190910-sd002-u1_-_memo.pdf (discussing growth of student loan debt and servicing errors that exacerbate borrower challenges).

² See, e.g., N. Y. Banking Law, Art. 14-A; Cal. Fin. Code, § 28100 et seq.; Colo. Rev. Stat. § 5-20-101 et seq.; Sections 36a-846 et seq., of the Connecticut General Statutes; D.C. Code §31-106.02; 110 Ill. Comp. Stat. 992/ Art. 1 et seq.; Section 65 of Chapter 358 of the Acts of 2020 (Mass.); Me. Rev. Stat. Title 9-A, Art. 14; R.I. Gen. Laws § 19-33; Wash. Rev. Code § 31.04 et seq.

³ See, e.g., U.S. Gov't Accountability Office, GAO 18-547, "Public Service Loan Forgiveness, Education Needs to Provide Better Information for the Loan Servicer and Borrowers" (Sept. 27, 2018), <https://www.gao.gov/products/GAO-18-547> (discussing improper servicing of the Public Service Loan Forgiveness program).

⁴ Letter from U.S. Senators to Kathleen Kraninger, Director, Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, Oversight of the Student Loan Industry (April 3, 2019), <https://www.warren.senate.gov/newsroom/press-releases/senators-warren-brown-and-colleagues-question-cfpbs-public-service-loan-forgiveness-program-oversight-failure> (expressing concern that the federal Consumer Financial Protection Bureau leadership has "abandoned its supervision and enforcement activities" related to these companies.)

⁵ Letter from Kathleen Kraninger, Director, Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, to U.S. Senator Elizabeth Warren, Oversight of the Student Loan Industry (April 23, 2019), <https://www.consumerfinancemonitor.com/wp-content/uploads/sites/14/2019/05/Kraninger-letter.pdf> (explaining that since December 2017 and pursuant to a guidance document issued by the Department, student loan servicers have declined to produce information requested protecting their student loan borrowers from servicer misconduct therefore has evolved and experienced challenges during the former administration. We are hopeful that this adversarial relationship will end, and that the Department of Education under the current administration will seek common goals with states.

The Department of Education can engage immediately with State regulators in protecting student loan borrowers.

An impactful step that you can take as the new Secretary of Education to ensure effective supervision of student loan servicers is to reverse two of the former administration's positions: (1) federal preemption of state oversight and (2) reliance on Privacy Act defenses.

Federal Preemption of State Oversight

In response to industry demand, in March 2018, Secretary DeVos published to the Federal Register an interpretation purporting to “clarify” that federal laws preempt certain state regulation of federal student loan servicers that were in “conflict” with federal law.⁶ In reversing prior administration policy, the Department of Education asserted that state-imposed regulations and licensure requirements conflict with federal law as well as its federal contracts, and thus are preempted.⁷ Concerningly, this may include preemption of certain traditional state consumer protections and regulatory tools.

While the Department of Education's current position is legally dubious and harmful to consumers, it also renders state-level oversight of student loan servicers more burdensome. Rejection of federal preemption of state consumer protection laws will facilitate state protection of student loan borrowers. In addition, we believe that promulgating a regulation to this effect through notice-and-comment rulemaking is the best way to ensure that borrowers will continue to benefit from state oversight of student loan servicers, regardless of who leads the Department of Education in the future.

Privacy Act Defenses Against Document Production

The former administration and the student loan servicer industry attempted to use the federal Privacy Act of 1974 as a shield from necessary state oversight, leaving states with no choice but litigation in obtaining documents needed for industry oversight.⁸ Obama administration rules expressly allowed for disclosure of Department of Education contractors' practices to state regulators, allowing for verification of compliance with state and local laws.⁹ The DeVos-era Department of Education often simply refused to produce such data, severely hampering states' consumer protection efforts in the student loan industry. In sum, we ask you to disregard the former administration's policy, and revert to the prior administration's policy in this area.

by the CFPB for supervisory examinations related to the Direct Loans and Federal Family Education Loan Program loans held by the Department).

⁶ Federal Preemption and State Regulation of the Department of Education's Federal Student Loan Programs and Federal Student Loan Servicers, 83 Fed. Reg. 10619 (March 12, 2018).

⁷ Id.

⁸ See Tamara Cesaretti, “New Navient Investigation Shed Light on How Courts Continue to Reject DeVos's Efforts to Shield Student Loan Companies,” Student Borrower Protection Center (Nov. 22, 2019), <https://protectborrowers.org/new-navient-investigations-shed-light-on-how-courts-continue-to-reject-devoss-efforts-to-shield-student-loan-companies/> (discussing five cases).

⁹ Privacy Act of 1974; System of Records, 81 Fed. Reg. 60687 (Sept. 2, 2016).

In the last four years, states have taken the lead on student loan servicer oversight. We are prepared to continue our work to protect student loan borrowers, and we look forward to partnering with the Federal Government in these efforts.

Sincerely,

Linda A. Lacewell, Superintendent
New York Department of Financial Services

Manuel P. Alvarez, Commissioner
California Department of Financial Protection and Innovation

Martha Upton Fulford, Administrator
Consumer Credit Unit
Office of the Attorney General
Colorado Department of Law

Jorge L. Perez, Commissioner
Connecticut Department of Banking

Deborah Hagan, Secretary
Illinois Department of Financial and Professional Regulation

William N. Lund, Superintendent
Maine Bureau of Consumer Credit Protection

Mary L. Gallagher, Commissioner
Massachusetts Division of Banks

Marlene Caride, Commissioner
New Jersey Department of Banking and Insurance

Elizabeth Kelleher Dwyer, Esq.,
Superintendent of Banking
Rhode Island Department of Business
Regulation

Charlie Clark, Director
Washington State Department of Financial Institutions

Kathy Blumenfeld, Secretary
Wisconsin Department of Financial Institutions